

Diary of a Labellover by A. Fashionista

September 09, 2008

Soucha steals the show at couture fashion week

If I was forced to choose my favorite show at couture fashion week it would have to be Egyptian designer, Soucha. Judging by the turn out, I was not the only one that was anticipating the American debut of his collection either.

His collection stunned the audience one look after the other. It just kept getting better, like a gift that kept on giving. Fanciful, feminine and ferocious. Who knew goth evening wear could look so fabulous? I gathered that his inspiration could have drawn from the Byzantine Era in history, with its Gothic overtones. Soucha studied in Italy and worked in some of the top Italian fashion houses, his craftsmanship is impeccable. His designs, whether embellished with ornate hardware or feathers added a sexy contrast to the delicate fabric.

I have included a few pics here but you can also click to my flickr page to view the rest of the collection. I promise you won't be disappointed.

http://diaryofalabellover.typepad.com/cheese_sandwich_diaries/2008/09/soucha-steals-the-show-at-couture-fashion-week-1.html